Social and Personal

The circus last night—society and otherwise—was quite a gay affair, with lots of real fun for everybody, for surely nobody could go to a circus except in a most happy mood, ready to tramp on sawdust, cut ponies over the side of the big ring and take all sorts of chances on the wide planks, politely dubbed "reserved seats." There was a large crowd and a merry one to see their thinnest friends be "strong men," and incidentally to help along the side of the big show and all the oddities concealed in little tents, with barkers at their own, there was much else to charm the passed-by—once inside. Young girls beguiled many to try the mysteries of real "circus food" all fixed up in fascinating booths. The Women's Club, of Ginter Park, served lemonade, Mr. Carter Scott and Mrs. Aubrey Young had charge of the peanut stand. Many other attractions will be found inside for those going to the performances this afternoon and to-night. Mrs. John Skelton Williams is chairman of the circus, and those holding boxes are Governor and Mrs. Mann, Mrs. J. Taylor Elyson, Miss Frances Scott, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Scott, John Kerr Branch, Joseph E. Willard, Mrs. George Cole Scott, Mrs. John Skelton Williams, Mrs. Granville Valentine, Mrs. Martha Valentine, Mrs. John Stewart Bryan, Mrs. Henry Baskerville, Mrs. Thomas N. St. Home Whist Club.
 The Stay-at-Home Whist Club held its regular weekly meeting Monday evening at the home of Mrs. Henningham Spilman, 809 Floyd Avenue. Three tables were engaged, and the best score was made by Mrs. Hand Smith and Arthur Cannon. Next week the club will meet with Mrs. Richmond ahead of Philadelphia.

Richmond ahead of Philadelphia.
 In a recent issue of the Philadelphia Press is the following article:
 "Among the new ideas in music comes an interesting announcement from the Hahn School of Music of violin kindergarten class for children from four to seven years of age. The system aims primarily to train the young student to discriminate and appreciate musical sounds and to arouse an interest in the study of the violin, and, not less important to the child, to concentrate the mind."
 Musical circles are displaying great interest in the possibilities of such youthful instruction. Now Richmond can say that such a school may be new to Philadelphia, but it is not new to Richmond, for just such a school has been in operation in our city for nearly three years, and has had remarkable success under the management of Mrs. E. D. H. who received much of her training in Germany, where children are taught from four years up. But class work in the South has been founded and taught by Mrs. Hequembourg. At first this school was so small that many teachers would have been discouraged and given up, but Mrs. Hequembourg knew no such word as fail, and Richmond can now boast of a well established and successful school, so large now that it is divided into two classes. The first class represents ages from four and one-half to seven years, and the second class, third class, nine to eleven, and senior class. Each class is called an orchestra, and it is delightful to see the interest these tiny tots take in their studies. Nothing but sickness will keep them away from class day playing. They are given private lessons by Mrs. Hequembourg or her assistants, and once a week they are brought together to play. It is wonderful to see the little ones reading at sight, getting notes, times and bowing correctly.

Richmond is nothing if not progressive, and always ready to recognize good ideas, has given the greatest encouragement to this enterprise, and the school has taken its place among important institutions. Its growth has been phenomenal. The methods taught in this school are the very best that are used in the famous schools of Europe. Several recitals have been given each year since its founding, showing the progress of the pupils.

PRESIDENT OF FRENCH CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES

Election of M. Deschanel Makes Him Conspicuous Candidate to Succeed Fallieres.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.
 AN EVENT has just taken place in the French Chamber of Deputies which has far-reaching consequences as far as international affairs are concerned, and that in the not distant future will allude to the election of M. Paul Eugene Louis Deschanel to the presidency of the French Chamber of Deputies, thus making him a member of the Academy for the presidency of the republic. In succession to President Fallieres.

There is no disputing the fact that Deschanel is a man of undoubted talents; he is a member of the Academy, a famous orator, and an impressive writer on political and social questions. But he is regarded by many as an "unsafe" man for the position of President, for the reasons that he has too limited a sense of the responsibilities of any office he might hold, and that he is too impetuous a talker, and also too regardless of the consequences of what he says.

As I mentioned in these letters the other day he gave great offense in Vienna some years ago by declaring in his speech of inauguration, and election at the French Academy, that "Emperor Francis Joseph's death would be a great opportunity, since it would bring about the destruction of our Austro-Hungarian Empire." For an ordinary French orator or writer to make such a declaration would be bad enough. But for a high official, who was President of the Chamber of Deputies at the time—to speak so publicly about the destruction of a friendly nation, and the demise of its beloved ruler, was unprecedented. And yet M. Deschanel was so little able to keep his tongue in his pocket, that he would be "person non grata" utterances that he actually applied for the position of ambassador at Vienna, from which capital, of course, a prompt notification was received that he would be "person non grata."

Presidents of republics—like emperors and kings—are as a rule keenly alive to the danger of an incautious remark about a foreign country, and submit every word to their cabinet before uttering it. What would therefore happen if the French elected as their chief magistrate a man who, while gifted with a copious vocabulary of incisive language, should have the habit of heedless and unfettered outspokenness, and of saying the word that is on his mind, and that would do the most harm, is too unpleasant to contemplate.

Resides all this, he is scarcely what we should call a "presentable" man. He is too much of a dandy in his dress; he has a foreign accent, and is too ready to lay himself open to the charge of foppishness and affectation. At one time he was a suitor for the hand of the sister of the notorious Mme. Humbert.

In the Surrogate's Court, New York, for probate. It disposes of New York property to the value of upwards of $1,000,000, in addition to his belongings in Canada, where he had a home in Montreal, though he lived a great part of his time in Paris. Deschanel, of course, is of Dutch origin. The English branch dates from the time of the first Baronet, Sir Joshua Vanneck, who was the second son of Cornelius Vanneck, paymaster-general of the land forces of the United Provinces.

This first baronet was a very rich London merchant. His son was created Baron Huntingfield. The present baron is the fourth of his line, and John Torrance Vanneck is his second cousin. When the present baron succeeded to his father's title and estates, he had a lawsuit on his hands, which threatened to deprive him of a considerable portion of his property, and which began in a very curious way, or rather, that was accomplished by an accident somewhat out of the common.

It seems that when the second baron Huntingfield married, in 1810, the daughter of a certain Lord, the latter, in the days of the old aristocracy, of Gloving Hall, Suffolk, it was regarded as a matter of course that the Gloving Hall estate would descend without question to Lady Huntingfield.

On the death of Chalmers Arceadecne the Huntingfields entered into possession of the estate, and, wishing to dispose of the Gloving Hall estate, placed it in the hands of a prominent firm of London real estate agents, with the understanding, of course, that they would exercise the usual precaution in issuing permits to view the place by likely purchasers.

One day, however, three bicyclists rode up to Gloving Hall, presented permits duly signed by the agents, and asked to be shown over the place. They were courteously received and the agent butler showed them the superb country seat.

Suddenly the elder of the three visitors informed the butler that they had made a mistake, and that they were not the persons to whom the place, as it belonged to him, the speaker, and that he was determined to exercise his right of ownership, adding that in acting thus he was following the advice of his lawyer, for the place really belonged to him, and in no wise whatever to Lord or Lady Huntingfield.

Convinced that he had a gang of lunatics to deal with, the butler called for assistance. The village policeman, the gamekeeper, the carpenter, and others quickly responded, and the visitors were carried out of the house. The policeman then issued notices of his alleged title on all the tenants, who were warned to pay the rents to no other person or persons than William Block, the claimant.

The latter, in the statement of his case, carried the title to the property back to the year 1616, but the interest begins with the year 1714, when Thomas Wynne was the owner. He had four sons and one daughter. The sons had a life interest in the property, the latter acquired a fee simple ownership for the time being. But the daughter married one Brady, and the issue of this marriage was a son, who married John Block, from whom the claimant was descended.

Although the claim was barred by the statute of limitations, yet this annoying suit interfered with the sale of Gloving Hall for a considerable time, as of course no purchaser cares to come forward and buy property the title to which is the subject of a lawsuit. The name Arceadecne is not often met with nowadays, having apparently been absorbed in the name of the Vannecks when the heiress married the second Baron Huntingfield. In the novel, however, speaking of the "Harry Foker" to Thackeray, in his novel, "The Virginians," who was a frequent butt of the novelist in their wordy encounters at the Garrick Club.

Somehow, however, Arceadecne, hit back in a fashion that made Thackeray wince. For instance, after the first night of the novelist's lecture on "The Four Georges," Arceadecne remarked encouragingly, "All very well, thank you—it wants a plan!"

I have mentioned the international alliances of the Vannecks. Here are a few: Maria, daughter of the first Baron Huntingfield, son Gerard married in 1810, Michael Henry Perceval, of Quebec; Caroline, another daughter, married Count Gersdorff, while a third daughter, Isabella, married in 1810, the Sicilian Duke d'Albanese. William Arceadecne Vanneck, brother of the present earl and his heir presumptive, is married to Mary, daughter of William Arceadecne, Viscount of Two Rivers, Queensland, while two other brothers also married in Australia.

As for the John Torrance whose will has just been probated in New York, he was the first son of the first Baron Huntingfield, son Gerard married in 1810, Michael Henry Perceval, of Quebec; Caroline, another daughter, married Count Gersdorff, while a third daughter, Isabella, married in 1810, the Sicilian Duke d'Albanese.
